Relation-ships of the Family to the Community.

There are three essential things that every family of the community should give its support to hold up the high standard of:

- 1- Health - 2. Good Community - 3. Entirely self-sufficient.

Each family of a community is responsible for the existing conditions of the community of which it forms a part.

Good health requires cooperation.

But the care of the health of the individual family is not enough, unless there is proper regard for the rights and health of others. I might know that I should breathe deeply of pure fresh air and attempt to put my knowledge into practice, but, if my neighbor pollutes the air with smoke or dust, I would not have fine gusts of fresh air, I may know that I should drink pure water, but, if some one contaminates the water supply, I should be unable to get pure water. In other words, in attempting to carry out even the simplest rule of health I find that I am dependent to no small degree upon my neighbor. So it is that we have in this matter of health a problem, calling upon not only the individual family of the community, but the whole group of families in the community.

A good community
